Dear Geoff,

We are experiencing a substantial improvement though difficult to quantify.

Air conditioners in the air conditioned areas definitely operate at lower levels and the other areas are much more tolerable, even though we have not reached our maximum temperature days.

We did measure the IBR temperature on a painted and an un-painted section as 33 and 49+ degrees Celsius, not sure what the reading conveyed as the thermometer was held flat against the IBR and the 16+ difference does not necessarily apply to the living area below. Suppose this will be further effected by airflow and cooling.

I also noted a 11% reduction in our power consumption although the painting jobs started in the middle of the assessed period. We also had maintenance performed on our solar geyser during this time and it is not possible to allocate the source for the saving. Will be interested to see the next month's consumption.

In summary, we think it is a great product and although we can't scientifically quantify the improvement, we are pleased with the cooler environment.

Sharp regards

Johan Oosthuysen.
